Media Intensive Program guided by aboriginal media makers

Write, shoot, edit! Tell your own stories

Taught by Aboriginal media professionals, this program is a Media Intensive Program for First Nations, Metis, Inuit and other peoples of Aboriginal descent. Students create a short piece from start to finish in six days, in small production teams of 3 or 4.

We emphasize storytelling, learning-by-doing, and practical small-budget filmmaking skills. Our school offers a safe social environment, which promotes focus and creativity. We endeavour to respect the variety of cultural traditions that students bring to the school.

This program has been running successfully for several years, with over 300 alumni as well as special projects sponsored by organisations such as the NFB and FNEC.
